

Convention Centre

Brisbane, Australia

The $170M Brisbane Convention Centre was developed by the Queensland Government to provide Brisbane with a world-class convention centre covering some 40,000 square meters.

It's success was supported in part by the unique communications solution provided by Commtech dealer Motek.

David Perks, then Managing Director of Motek reported,

"The sheer size of the site was daunting – the distributed antenna system needed to achieve the required coverage was extremely sophisticated".

Motek supplied fifty Motorola Two Way Radios and more than sixty alphanumeric pagers that are used by both staff and exhibitors alike.

In addition to engineering the complex antenna configuration, Motek interfaced BASEPage into the latest AT&T PABX to provide a full voice-prompting system.

The Brisbane Convention system required the voice-prompting system due to the large number of casual and general public who use the paging system.

Voice-prompted PABX messaging from BASEPage means that staff and general public simply call BASEPage and are prompted through the process of sending a message – making it so simple anyone can do it!

A secondary paging terminal was also located in the security office where it is used to contact security staff and to monitor the Wormald and Satchwell security and building management systems.

With this integration, messages are sent automatically and almost instantly to the relevant staff in the event of a security or building alarm. This simple systems saves untold time and resources in the management of the complex.
